REDUCING THE RISK OF WILDFIRES

Gone are the days when wildfires

the western United States. Rising temperatures, prolonged drought, and shifting weather patterns are creating dangerous conditions in places that historically experienced few major fires. Today, more than 30 states face elevated wildfire risk. The reality is clear: wildfire risk is no longer regional — it's national. And it demands action from all of us.

At Daviess-Martin County REMC, protecting our members and the communities we serve is our highest priority. As we recognize National Wildfire Awareness Month in May, I want you to know that wildfire mitigation is not seasonal work for us. It is a year-round commitment embedded in how we operate and invest in our local system.

One of the most important ways we reduce wildfire threats is through our comprehensive vegetation management program. Overgrown trees and power lines are a dangerous combination, particularly during dry and windy conditions. Throughout the year, Daviess-Martin County REMC crews — along with our trusted local contractors — proactively trim and remove vegetation that could come into contact with power lines and other critical infrastructure. This work requires careful planning, coordination with property owners, and ongoing inspection. While it may not always be visible, it is one of the most effective tools we have to prevent fire ignition and maintain reliable electricity.

In addition to boots on the ground, Daviess-Martin County REMC is leveraging advanced technology to strengthen our system. Advanced imaging tools and system analytics allow us to detect abnormal conditions and respond quickly. When needed, we can also use drones to inspect miles of line in a matter of minutes. By investing in these modern technologies, we are shifting from reactive repairs to proactive prevention — identifying risks early and addressing them before they become emergencies.

Wildfire mitigation also requires thoughtful public policy. Managing electric infrastructure in and around public lands can present unique challenges. That is why we support practical, commonsense solutions such as the Fix Our Forests Act, which would streamline the ability of electric cooperatives and other utilities to maintain power lines on federal lands and reduce hazardous “fuel” buildup. Policies that promote responsible land management are an essential part of a comprehensive wildfire prevention strategy.

While we are committed to doing our part, wildfire prevention is a shared responsibility. There are important steps each of us can take to protect our homes and neighborhoods. Properly extinguish fires by dousing them with water, stirring the ashes, and ensuring they are cool to the touch before leaving the area. Avoid outdoor burning on windy or excessively dry days. Maintain a defensible space around your home by clearing dry leaves, dead branches, and other flammable debris. Use lawn equipment carefully, particularly during hot conditions, and always check local regulations for burn bans or restrictions.

Wildfires are becoming more complex and more widespread, but through proactive system management, smart investments, sound policy, and community partnership, we can reduce risks and strengthen resilience.

At Daviess-Martin County REMC, we take this responsibility seriously. Our members depend on us not only for reliable power, but for leadership in safeguarding the communities we call home.

Enhance safety at home and work during National Electrical Safety Month

May is National Electrical Safety Month, a reminder that while electricity makes life easier, it also poses serious risks. Understanding electrical hazards and following basic safety practices can help reduce the risk of injury or death in both the home and the workplace.

At home, residents are encouraged to avoid overloaded outlets, use extension cords only temporarily, and rely on qualified electricians for electrical work. Keeping cords in good condition and out of high-traffic areas can also help prevent hazards.

Workplace electrical hazards are also a concern. The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reports an average of 150 workplace electrical fatalities each year, with many occurring in jobs that are not electrical in nature. This highlights the importance of electrical safety awareness for all workers, not just those in electrical occupations.

This month is an opportunity to focus on awareness and proactive action to help create safer environments for everyone.

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reports an average of 150 workplace electrical fatalities each year.
